The

New School is proud to announce our involvement as a Host Sponsor for the Association for the Advancement of Sustainability in Higher Education's (AASHE) 2016 Conference & Expo in Baltimore, Oct. 9-12. With a theme of Beyond the Campus, this conference inspires, motivates, energizes and empowers higher education professionals to advance sustainability initiatives and programs. Higher education institutions have been modeling sustainability solutions on their campuses for many years, and we are excited to be able to highlight our initiatives and explore how we can collaborate across sectors to advance sustainability. "We are grateful for the overwhelming support from our Host Institutions as we work together to lead the sustainability transformation. I am confident that this conference will provide participants with a platform to explore innovative solutions to advance sustainability in higher education and the surrounding community," said AASHE Executive Director Meghan Fay Zahniser. Additional host institutions of the 2016 AASHE Conference & Expo include our master host institutions: Frostburg State University, George Washington University, Johns Hopkins University, University of Maryland Eastern Shore, Villanova University and Virginia Commonwealth University; our regional host institutions: Bowie State University and Virginia Theological Seminary; and our supporting host institutions: American University, College of William & Mary, Goucher College, Harford Community College, University of Maryland College Park, University of Richmond as well as the University of Virginia.
